10	A reaction to my article “The Forgotten Half of the Patent Clause Constitutional Argument in One Picture” – see ch. 1, V1	The Presidential Letters @Cudaboy3 · Apr 26 ... It cuts clean—but it needs a careful read. The Founders made a very specific bargain in the [Patent Clause] (chatgpt://generic-entity?number=1): Temporary protection... in exchange for eventual public benefit. That part hasn't disappeared. Patents still expire. But what has changed is everything around it. Layer by layer, modern regulatory systems—safety rules, emissions standards, licensing structures—have made it harder in practice to remanufacture, rebuild, or reintroduce products once they fall out of protection. So the letter of the bargain remains. The accessibility of the benefit is where friction shows up. That's what this post is pointing at. And it's a real tension. ... Lenses matter. The "skin in the game" idea—tying a DOGE Dividend ($5,000-$8,000 per household) to a legislator debt-reduction bonus ($190K-$240K)—is a clever way to push for bipartisan support on debt cuts. DeepSearch pegs the odds of 60+ Senate votes at 55-65% with both incentives, jumping to 65-75% if Hybrid Voting (a secret ballot method used pre-1929) is added. Historically, Congress slashed debt 76 times before 1957, often by over 3% annually—modern gridlock makes that tough without bold moves like these. Thoughts?

Gregory Del Vecchio @gregory_ve97041 This is true! I have experienced this in the automotive industry when consulting on aftermarket computerized scan tools. Manufacturers claim that the software is "proprietary" and are able to "skirt" the patent expiration dates. This has resulted in aftermarket scan tools being ineffective for certain types of troubleshooting. This year, they took it a step further and completely stopped third party scan tools from troubleshooting and diagnosing car performance issues. This has, effectively, doubled the cost of auto repairs on newer cars. All of this is being ignored by committees in Congress designed to protect the consumer. 11	A reaction to my article "Farm Associations Open a Fifth Front Against the Lawfare War Against Expired Patents" – see ch. 14, V1	 Gonzalez  @thesergeantags · Jul 14  Commentary account Well, I think the regulations and licenses for new patents are undoubtedly hitting a wall, which, given the current European situation of strict controls in agriculture, has repercussions here. The New World Order even intends to use a political form of law, seemingly endorsed by countries within that intricate network of the Davos Economic Forum and the European Commission in Brussels, with people who haven't even been elected by us, but who threaten us with international courts and laws, where they apparently want to control everything. It doesn't surprise me at all that many of our citizens are involved... Just look at many current events, for example, the war in Iran, where many so-called citizens even want us to lose that war and even create false news stories to sow doubt. I've never seen anything like it in my life, but if you analyze it from the left-wing political perspective of the New World Order, you immediately perceive the hand that sows division. So "the patent clause violations you've written about so far, cars, trucks, refrigerators, incandescent light bulbs, farm equipment, show the greatest cost disparity" are due to the divisive reasons created by "you know..."

This is a really cool experiment by @RoleighMartin asking three different AIs about disputed presidential elections. He asked Elon Musk's Grok, Mark Zuckerberg's Llama, and Gab's AI about the disputed election from 1876, then asked them a couple more questions such as how that precedent and changes in law since then would play out in a disputed presidential election in 2024.

While all three of the AI seemed far more fair and balanced than the MSM discussing this topic, you can see the differences: Grok is incredibly comprehensive, Llama is short and curt, and Gab AI is more willing to state controversial things IMHO.
